SUGGESTIONS TO TEACHERS.

SPELLING and pronunciation are mainly matters of imitation, and therefore constitute a school-exercise rather than a school-study. For this reason, teachers should not arbitrarily assign spelling-lessons to be mastered by their pupils without assistance, but should work with their pupils whenever the latter have the spelling-book in hand. Every word of the lesson should be repeatedly spelled and pronounced by the teacher by way of preliminary preparation; the pupils of course, being required to observe and follow this performance with the utmost care. Especially should this assistance be rendered in the case of primary pupils. In fact, very young children should rarely be allowed to make use of books of any kind, except when the teacher is working with them. As soon as the teacher is called to the discharge of other duties, the books of the infant class should generally be laid aside or gathered in, and the use of the slate resumed.

The spelling-exercise should be of regular and daily occurrence; or, better still, the old-time practice of closing both morning and afternoon sessions with spelling could be profitably observed. In mixed or ungraded country schools the pupils should be divided into about three classes for spelling purposes. When the time for the preparation of this lesson has arrived, the primary class is first taken in hand, the remainder of the school being as yet engaged upon other tasks. The primary pupils come forward and stand in line, with open book, and finger upon word, the teacher passing to and fro in the rear of the class to see that none lose the place. The teacher then spells the first word in the lesson, the class repeating the same several times in concert. The word is then passed down the line, each of the pupils spelling it in succession from the open book. The whole lesson having been treated, word by word, in this manner, the pupils are remanded to their seats; and the intermediate class comes forward, and prepares its lesson in similar style, with, perhaps, less of repetition than in the case of the primary pupils. While the intermediate class is upon the floor, the primary pupils turn to the same lesson, and join with the intermediates in concert-spelling, so far as they may be able. The members of the advanced class next take up their spelling-books, and the whole school joins with them in their lesson. The teacher first spells a word, and then some pupil having a full and clear voice repeats the same once or twice, and the whole school follows in concert. The preliminary preparation of all the lessons having been completed, each class is remanded to the study of its particular lesson, and the teacher resumes work with the primary class, calling for volunteers, one by one, to rise, and spell the words upon dictation. Volunteers are next called for in the other classes. To conclude the exercise, the pupils leave their books, and form in lines for the final spelling, — the primary class first, and the others in succession. The primary pupils, having concluded their task, open their books, and watch the spelling of the other classes. The advanced class should form in the rear part of the room, and the remaining pupils, being between the class and the teacher, should be directed to raise their hands upon discovering any error in the spelling, and should also be accorded the privilege of making the proper correction.

These suggestions are not made with the expectation that they will be literally followed, but rather for the purpose of setting forth the duty of teachers of all schools to render every possible assistance to their pupils in the preparation of the spelling-lesson, and the further duty of teachers of mixed schools to adopt such a mode of conducting the spelling-exercise as will enable the primary classes to receive incidental benefit from the instruction given to classes more advanced. This incidental instruction of primary pupils should be made a cardinal feature of all exercises in mixed schools, and particularly of the reading and spelling exercise.

Oral spelling should be the rule. Oral spelling is an exercise in pronunciation; while written spelling is not. When a word is spelled orally, it is heard by all the pupils in school, and the exercise thus becomes a means of instruction to all; but, when words are written down in silence, there is no such accompanying advantage. Written spelling has its merits; but it should be mainly confined to copying upon the slate from the reading-book. It thus becomes a means of teaching punctuation and the use of capitals, as well as spelling.

In the process of spelling, there should be a separate pronunciation of each syllable; and, at the end of every syllable, the whole word should be repronounced as far as it has been spelled. The spelling of the word "accommodation" will serve to illustrate this method: — a-c-ac-c-o-in-com-accom-in-o-ino-accommo-d-a-da-accommo-da-t-i-o-n-tion-accommodation. This mode of spelling constitutes a valuable vocal exercise. It brings out the sound of each syllable with the utmost distinctness, and thus renders the final pronunciation of the word as a whole a matter of comparative ease. The pupil who builds up the word step by step in this manner can hardly fail to achieve a successful pronunciation in the end. And it is really the only mode of spelling suitable for a concert exercise, especially in mixed schools. The veriest tyro in the primary class will soon learn to keep time with the most advanced pupil.

Correct pronunciation is a matter of the highest importance, and particular attention is called to the fact that the latter half of this book furnishes unequalled facilities for mastering the orthoepy of the words abounding in the higher walks of English literature. In regard to this class of words it may possibly be said that pronunciation is of more importance than spelling. If, therefore, the spelling of these words is not committed to memory, it is recommended that at least they be spelled and pronounced from the open book by the whole school in concert, in the manner already suggested for the preparation of the spelling-exercise of the advanced class. The entire list of words of three or more syllables should be thus spelled and pronounced once, at least, in each school term or year.

Pupils should not be required to learn definitions to any great extent. All attempts to acquire a knowledge of the signification of words by committing to memory a mass of arbitrary definitions have invariably proved failures. The meaning of words can be learned only by meeting with them frequently in an extensive course of reading. A taste for good reading should therefore be developed at an early age; and, to accomplish this desirable result, a library of well-selected juvenile works should be attached to every school; and these library books should be given out to be read during school-hours in the latter part of the day, after the completion of regular lessons.

A portion of the words on pages 113 and 114 are marked as having a secondary as well as primary accent. A secondary accent is also marked in the case of a number of the words of five and six syllables. In the list of words differently pronounced the first pronunciation annexed to each word is that given or preferred by Webster. It will probably not be considered to be the best in all cases.

SOUNDS OF THE LETTERS.

THE table on the following page is designed to exhibit the elementary sounds of the language, and also the system of diacritical marks used in Webster's Dictionary. The letters which are numbered represent original sounds; those that are not numbered have imitative sounds merely, and are identical in force with the letters contained in the parentheses following them. According to this system, there are forty-three elementary sounds in the language; but a careful discrimination would probably reduce the number.

Letters are divided into vowels and consonants. The vowels are a, e, i, o, u, and sometimes w and y. The remaining letters of the alphabet are consonants. At the beginning of a syllable, w and y are consonants; in other situations, they are reckoned as vowels. A diphthong is a union of two vowels in one syllable, as oi in boil. A triphthong is a union of three vowels in one syllable, as eau in beauty. Accent is a stress of voice upon a particular syllable.

THE SOUND OF U.

We are informed by our lexicographers that the English language is destitute of any sound like long u, occurring after the letter r. The u in such case is said to have the sound of oo in moon. A few examples are here given in order to illustrate this notion, not to indorse it.

rule, rool	grew, groo	bruise, brooze	frugal, froogal
rude, rood	drew, droo	cruise, crooze	ruler, rooler
crude, crood	crew, croo	ruin, rooin	rumor, roomor
prude, prood	brew, broo	ruby, rooby	peruse, perooze
prune, proon	rue, roo	cruel, crooel	intrude, introod
brute, broot	true, troo	gruel, grooel	imbrue, imbroom
truce, troose	ruse, rooze	prudent, proodent	accrue, accroo
spruce, sproose	fruit, froot	rural, rooral

RULES FOR SPELLING.

1. Words of one syllable, having but one vowel, and ending with a single consonant, double that consonant before the terminations ed, er, and ing; as, robbed, sobbed, mobbed, rubbed, rigged, bagged, lagged, hemmed, dimmed, hummed, dipped, sipped, hopped, dragged, planned, scanned, trimmed, slipped, skipped, scarred, charred, spurred, nodded, wedded, dotted, rotted, fitted, plodded, blotted, spotted, rapping, tapping, running, jarring, fanning, trotting, shutting, cramming, dripping, scrubbing.

2. Words of two syllables, accented upon the last, when the last syllable has but one vowel, and ends with a single consonant, also double the final consonant before the terminations ed, er, and ing; as, compelled, rebelled, annulled, deferred, occurred, abhorred, committed, acquitted, excelling, regretting, beginning, concurring.

3. Words of two syllables, accented on the first, do not double the final consonant before the terminations ed, er, and ing; as traveler, leveler, libeler, jeweler, listener, gardener, plunderer, slanderer, trumpeter, reckoner, worshiper, tunneling, counseling, canceling, scampering, prospering, showering, traveled, reveled, modeled, loitered, covered, visited, credited, beckoned, worshiped.

4. Words of one syllable, having two vowels, or ending with two consonants, do not double the final consonant before the terminations ed, er, and ing; as, feeding, foaming, leading, raining, gained, dreamed, sailed, bloomed, boiler, waiter, creeper, booster, painter, printer.

5. Words ending in e generally drop the e before the terminations ing and able; as, baking, making, facing, saving, hoping, roving, dining, lining, serving, living, giving, coming, bluing, gluing, suing, leaving, sparkling, struggling, drizzling, damaging, balancing, calculating, movable, provable, tamable, namable, finable, lovable, mistakable, excitable, supposable, abatable.

6. Words ending in y with a consonant before it change the y to i before the terminations es, ed, er, est; as, flies, skies, tries, spies, plies, relies, supplies, applies, ladies, navies, cities, duties, ponies, stories, fortifies, vilifies, dried, cried, fried, replied, complied, gloried, queried, hurried, pitied, studied, happier, happiest, merrier, merriest, sorrier, sorriest, jollier, jolliest, sillier, silliest, earlier, earliest, uglier, ugliest, holier, holiest.

7. Words ending in ay, ey, and oy, retain the y before all terminations; as, played, flayed, prayed, strayed, swayed, delayed, decayed, displayed, annoyed, enjoyed, destroyed, hackneyed, plays, stays, trays, allays, defrays, employs, conveys, surveys, pulleys, donkeys, kidneys, jockeys, journeys, moneys.

8. Words ending in o generally add es to form the plural; as heroes, negroes, grottoes, mottoes, cargoes, calicoes, volcanoes, tornadoes, potatoes, tomatoes.

There are some exceptions to the foregoing rules; as, paid, laid, staid, said, daily, hoeing, toeing, shoeing, dyeing, fleeing, freeing, seeing, singeing, chargeable, changeable, peaceable, traceable, effaceable, manageable.

PUNCTUATION AND CAPITAL LETTERS.

The principal punctuation-points are the comma, the semi-colon, the colon, the period, the interrogation-point, and the exclamation-point.

The comma (,) indicates a short pause; the semicolon (;) indicates a pause longer than that of the comma; the colon (:) indicates a pause longer than that of the semicolon; and the period (.) indicates a full stop, or end of a sentence. The period, or dot, is also placed after all abbreviations and initial letters.

The interrogation-point (?) shows that a question is asked.

The exclamation-point (!) denotes wonder or astonishment.

The parenthesis ( ) or brackets [ ] include words or signs intended as an explanation.

Quotation-marks (" ") include words quoted from a writer or speaker.

The apostrophe (') shows that one or more letters have been purposely omitted; as, o'er for over.

The caret (^), used only in manuscript, shows the accidental omission of a word or letter; as, I lost <sup>my</sup> hat.

The dash (—) denotes a sudden stop or change of subject.

The hyphen (-) is used to connect the parts of compound words.

The ellipsis (***) shows that words or sentences have been omitted.

The index (☞) calls attention to some important passage.

The paragraph (¶) denotes the beginning of a new subject.

The asterisk (*) and other signs refer to notes in the margin.

The diæresis (¨) is sometimes placed over a vowel to show that it is not to be joined in pronunciation with the preceding vowel; as, coöperate.

A capital letter should be used at the beginning of the first word of every sentence, and also at the beginning of all proper names of persons, countries, cities, oceans, rivers, &c. A capital should be used at the beginning of every line in poetry, of every direct quotation, and often of an important word. The pronoun I and the interjection O are always in capitals.

KINNE'S SPELLING-BOOK.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

From Hon. JOHN EVERETT, State Superintendent.

I have examined KINNE'S SPELLING-BOOK with great care from beginning to end. It is a book to which a great amount of time, patience, and labor have been devoted, and the work is very carefully done. The classification of words in Part I., according to the first sounds and consonant combinations, is admirably done. Part II. is good for pronunciation purposes, and is valuable as a basis of word analysis, the words being arranged according to terminations and suffixes, as well as syllables.

JOHN SWIFT.

San Francisco, Nov. 14, 1877.

From Hon. O. P. FEEZGERALD, State Superintendent.

I have carefully examined the manuscript of KINNE'S SPELLING-BOOK, and do not hesitate to say that its method is good, and its execution admirable; in a word, that Mr. Kinne has made an excellent Speller.

San Francisco, Dec. 20, 1877.

O. P. FEEZGERALD.

From Hon. JAMES D. HANCOCK, State Superintendent.

After having carefully examined the manuscript of KINNE'S SPELLING-BOOK, I take great pleasure in recommending it to the favorable consideration of teachers and all who are interested in the education of our youth. The lessons are well arranged, and the combinations of words are the most complete which I have ever seen. The attention of our youth to their elementary studies will render it a profitable work of teaching the correct pronunciation of our language comparatively easy.

The preparation of the entire book shows great care and research, and I trust that it will receive the encouragement which its merits demand.

San Francisco, Nov. 12, 1877.

JAMES D. HANCOCK.

From Hon. A. L. MANN, City Superintendent.

I have examined with considerable care the manuscript of a spelling-book by Mr. KINNE. It presents some new and valuable features. I consider it a decided improvement upon the spelling-books of Webster or Wilson. To those who use a spelling-book I am willing to recommend Mr. Kinne's as the best.
